Jason E. Glenn PH.D.

Jason E. Glenn is an associate professor in the Department of History and Philosophy of Medicine; the executive director of the REPAIR Project at the University of Kansas Medical Center; and an associate director for education for the newly launched KUMC Center for African American Health. His areas of research specialty include health inequities, mass incarceration, the history of drug policy in the U.S., and the ethics and history of human subject research. He received a B.A. from Stanford University in 1996, and a M.A. and Ph.D. in the history of science and medicine from Harvard University in 2001 and 2005, respectively. He spent 12 years at UTMB as the James Wade Rockwell Distinguished Professor in Medical History within the Institute for the Medical Humanities. Dr. Glenn is also a founder and past director of Sobriety High, Inc., a nonprofit organization providing community re-entry services for persons with a history of substance abuse who were returning to Galveston from prison. As director of Sobriety High, he was also a co-founder of the Galveston County Restorative Justice Community Partnership and the Galveston County Hope Drug Court. His current research investigates abusive policing practices as a structural determinant of ill health in so affected communities. Currently, he is leading a national coalition to pilot and standardize an abolition-based curriculum for delivering healthcare to persons with histories of criminal-legal system involvement
