Discussion

The Kansas City Metropolitan Crime Commission is a public safety nonprofit that was established in 1949 to fight crime and corruption. The Kansas City Metropolitan Crime Commission established the Second Chance program in 2008 as an employment first model for returning citizens. This reentry program provides intensive case management with limited funds for wraparound services. Second Chance has more than 13 years of experience in reducing barriers to community reintegration, increasing individual and family stability, and reducing the return to incarceration. Furthermore, Second Chance has experience working specifically with returning citizens that have violent crime convictions. Since 2019, specialized programming has been provided to a caseload of persons with violent felonies residing in low resource neighborhoods of our city.

With these funds, Second Chance will provide evidence-based reentry support to no fewer than 120 individuals that have been recently released to Kansas City, Missouri and have either an active violent felony or violent felonies in their prior conviction background. Priority consideration will be given to those individuals most affected by violence.

At least 120 individuals will receive stipends to support them as they undergo vocational training, peer support groups, conflict resolution training, and parenting and healthy relationship training. Second Chance will track recidivism with the goal that no more than 10% will return to incarceration for a new crime.
